Opinion News

An aerial view of Miami, one of the cities threatened by climate change that is profiled in Jeff Godell's book "The Water Will Come: Rising Seas, Sinking Cities, and the Remaking of the Civilized World" (Wikimedia Commons/Murray Foubister)

by Michael Sean Winters

View Author Profile

Follow on Twitter at @michaelswinters

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

November 14, 2017

Share on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

At the Working-Class Perspectives blog, Allison Hurst explains precisely why the Democrats lost last year. That is not the subject of Hurst's post; she is writing about working-class families and the challenges their kids face. Which college to go to is not on the list. Until Dems find candidates who can speak to these working-class families, they will not only lose but they will deserve to lose.

At the Humanum quarterly, Kirk Kramer reviews a new biography of John Senior, one of the most important, if lesser-known, Catholic thinkers of the 20th century.

At The Washington Post, Bill McKibben reviews Jeff Godell's The Water Will Come: Rising Seas, Sinking Cities, and the Remaking of the Civilized World, which does not bring comforting news about the effects of climate change: We are further along the road to a catastrophe, and while Rome burns, our new Nero is tweeting.

At Politico, Sen. Bernie Sanders writes on how to fix the Democratic Party. I do not agree with everything on his agenda: I worry about the effects of open primaries that allow unaffiliated voters to cast ballots. But Sanders' diagnosis further exposes some of the deep problems the Dems face.

Also at Politico, a report from Alabama: Conservative evangelicals are standing by their man, Roy Moore. It would be funny if it were not so pathetic.

Advertisement

[Michael Sean Winters covers the nexus of religion and politics for NCR.]

Editor's note: Don't miss out on Michael Sean Winters' latest: Sign up to receive free newsletters, and we'll notify you when he publishes new Distinctly Catholic columns.